Hi, folks.

I wanted to give you an update that we're in the process of standing up InfusionsoftStatus.com. In the interest of full disclosure, reliability and communication, this blog will be updated with specific product and service issues that may happen.

Wait, why two blogs?

As you might know, I also run the Infusionblog.com which contains Internet marketing, small business and general company events. The reason why there is yet another blog is because it will serve a very specific purpose: providing timely updates on software issues and updates.

If you're interested, my vision around this project is inspired by the Dreamhost Status Blog -- another large Web company which had/have their own growing pains and it's a great service to their customers.

Who is this intended for?

The Infusionsoft Status blog is intended for any person who uses Infusionsoft. You'd probably want to check it out first before you contact us, just in case we're already on top of it.

If you have a geek, Webmaster or a technical resource, let them know to subscribe to it. It will definitely be helpful for them so they know what's up with our software.

So, what's next?

I'm in the midst of finalizing the blog, training the team here on blogging and working on fine-tuning the process around the publishing on it.
